

The Unsettling Comparison of the Common Purpose British Police Force (State Service) with that of Communist East Germany's Stasi

The Stasi's hierarchy was headed by Erich Mielke (centre).

N.B: These many comparisons are underlined at each point for readers to then consider.

At the time of political division within Germany the Communist East (German Democratic Republic) had a police force of almost paramilitary purpose. They were called the Stasi. The Stasi were a secret police who monitored politically incorrect behaviour amongst all citizens (1) of East Germany, sometimes venturing into West Germany. They were highly regarded as one of the most effective intelligence agencies in the world. Their motto was "Schild und Schwert der Partei" (Shield and Sword of the Party (2)). It was modelled on the Soviet MGB.

During the 1989 peaceful revolution, offices of the Stasi were overrun by enraged citizens. The Stasi promptly burnt a lot of their files, but those that still remain show that the people who reported their fellow citizens to the Stasi were more often the victims' friends, colleagues, husbands, wives and other family members. (3) This social division and mutual treachery (4) is one that, throughout their 'Thought Police' tactics of silencing opposition to them, our very own government aspires to. Unarguably, this is the ultimate goal of our own state.

After the fall of the Berlin Wall it was revealed that the Stasi had aided Left-wing terrorists (5) such as Baader-Meinhof (Red Army Faction). The consequent dissolution of the state of East Germany spelt an end to the Stasi and subsequently an end to support of these groups, which obviously led to their demise.

The Stasi's influence over almost every aspect of life (6) in the German Democratic Republic cannot be overestimated. Until the mid-1980s, a civilian network of informants grew within East and West Germany. These were called Inoffizielle Mitarbeiter (IMs), or unofficial collaborator. When East Germany finally collapsed in 1989, it is estimated that the Stasi had 91,000 full time employees and 300,000 informants. This means approximately one in fifty East Germans collaborated with the Stasi, one of the highest penetrations of any society by an organisation.

1) As we all know politically incorrect behaviour such as displaying a cuddly toy in a shop window will result in prosecution because the state police (Stasi) consider it a 'hate crime' and thus takes priority over rapes and murders. Children as young as 10 calling other children names in the playground WILL be arrested if they mention another child's obvious racial features or supposed sexual persuasion. This happened to a young boy at a primary school in Irlam, Salford after he got involved in an argument, as kids do, with a pupil of 'mixed-race' appearance. The police arrested the minor and the Crown Prosecution Service decided to press charges.

2) The police have, since the neo-Communist Labour Party seized power with a mandate of only 21 per cent of the electorate, become more and more politicised to the extent of being under the due care and Red despotic jackboot of the Dear Leadership. Once the republicans have got their way, and the Crown on police uniforms is replaced with something approximating the hammer and sickle, then the police will proudly display the "Shield and Sword of the Party".

3) A lot of the mindless in today's society have become state operatives. They use the Marxist tools of political 'correctness', Race Acts and dubious laws to silence free speech and report the 'offender' to a police 'force' that is now servile, gutless and obsequiously obedient to their masters and the targets these despots have set for their toy foot soldiers.

4) The division of society has been a prerequisite to the state reigning totalitarian over us. "Strength in Unity" is an adage that once summarised the both physical and moral strength of the communities we lived in and once enjoyed the solidarity of. The dismantling of this strength was a precursor to the doubt, confusion and distrust of our kith and kin that was soon to follow. Surrounded by all this disorder and mistrust of fellow man, who do people turn to; who do they put their trust in for the hope of being defended against the social anarchy that has been created? The government - and don't they just arrogantly rejoice in the ironic action of the public seeking support from the very same people who exacted the threat over them. "Trust no one. Listen not to your hearts but to your government." - The Dear Leadership.

5) "One man's terrorist is another man's freedom fighter" and these supposed freedom fighters of the Left are terrorists to those right-minded citizens still in this country. By being such slavish operatives of the state and its favouritism shown to the communistic Nazis of the fascist Left, the police are aiding and abetting the downfall not only of our people but of our country.

The Left, the mentally deranged opposition to democracy, constantly riot at demonstrations (anti-globalisation march in London) and are invariably violent at days of action held by the Right -but they are seldom prosecuted.

6) We are now living in a very real police state. With the advent of the disproportionate amount of C.C.T.V. cameras prying upon our every action, we have become the most watched nation in the world. Other infringements on our ancient liberties and private freedoms that have been proposed are I.D. cards and the reintroduction of house arrest (internment). This is Indicative of central government trying to monitor behaviour for the purpose of fulfilling their own their own self-righteousness. If their personal views lead to actions are in their minds 'fair', 'socially just' and for the 'benefit of the people' then how can they be wrong? How can their repressive stance on society plausibly be impeached?
